

"The Transition," or: A Message from the Future

It didn't happen overnight. There was not this one moment, the big event in the media, the moment when you could say: Now the old order is gone, and the new one begins. There was no worldwide celebration of joy and no fireworks. It happened unnoticed by most, quietly and silently...

When, after years of resistance and seemingly futile and very tough struggle, people finally realized that the said moment would never come as long as they waited for it... they made probably the most important decision of their time, and the new world could finally be born.

It was built parallel to the old structures. We realized that it was up to each one of us to stand in our own way. There was no paradise waiting for us, we had to create it. And so we shifted our time, attention and energy away from the currents of fear, suffering, anger, hatred, revenge, punishment and destruction of the old - to building the new world as we imagined it.

We were no longer fighting the old entrenched society, freeing ourselves from the idea that all we had to do was force the rest of the people to wake up and everything would be fine... because the frog was completely soft-boiled by now, and no matter how much more pressure was applied, it would achieve nothing, but only harm our beloved fellow human beings.

A change in thinking took place. We created new structures, new organizations, communities and administrations, and simply let go of the old world. We made ourselves self-sufficient and independent. We didn't need the old system anymore.

When other people saw how much nicer, freer and easier life was in the new world we exemplified to them, they ran over to us in droves. They left their old jobs, their banks, insurance companies, administrations and partnerships, their hospitals and unhealthy supermarkets, took their children out of the forced indoctrination institutions ("schools") of that time, and joined us.

What happened was what no one would have expected: people simply stopped participating. They ignored the old system, thereby draining it of all energy, and it simply became superfluous.

The new grew and grew... and only a few hardcore people still held on to their old rules, taxes and regulations. They screamed and fidgeted, but they just wouldn't let go. They didn't want to believe that we had created a new paradise on earth, completely different from what they had imagined. Without destroying the old system, without violence, without struggle, without large-scale upheaval or revolution, only with the help of our creativity and creative power, we created a new community in parallel, based on love, compassion, voluntariness, and giving instead of taking. We showed them a real alternative to the past. Everyone was well cared for, in good health and radiant with joy, zest for life and zest for action. There was no competition, no envy and no resentment among each other, because our souls were simply no longer capable of feeling these lower vibrations.

Many at that time had problems to make this decision for themselves and to determine the time of the transition, because they waited for an external event that would indicate the beginning. They preferred to continue to focus all their day's work on struggle and destruction, and the compulsion of having to wake everyone else up before they could move on to the next phase.

In the meantime, we were building our world, with real free people, far away from the Internet and social media, where the battle continued to rage... because this was only virtual, and a new matrix that held people captive. In the real world, paradise was already within reach.

We already knew everything we needed to know. We had all the tools at hand, each within himself. How much information does a person need before he takes action?

Passive consumers became active creators. There was simply no need any more to chase after new messages full of hope every day, to seek confirmation, or to fill up daily with "light and love" from others, and to absorb more and more spiritual knowledge, because the true source of all this lies within ourselves, and not in some chats. Endless discussions and theories about the future also did not help anyone, but only action in the NOW.

Unbridled creativity, courage, and the godlike joy of building and creating, of working on the realization of one's own dreams, of seeing them grow and blossom - this created our new paradise, and not the destruction of the old order, because it was sinking into insignificance and collapsing anyway.

When we realized all this, and redirected our energy flows, the New World could finally be born.

People stopped asking others: when will we finally be helped (soon)? but asked themselves the question: what can I do TODAY to make the world a more beautiful place for me and others? And the Internet became again what it used to be: a tool to exchange information, to communicate and network with each other, nothing more.

After all the years of isolation and separation, real life finally took place again from person to person, from soul to soul. Large communities formed, entire villages, and the happy pioneers of the new age sat around their campfires late into the night telling each other stories like this one - what it was like back then, in 2022, when love returned to the world.
